SHEILA'S TWO LOVERS

One Was Rich, the Other Poor; One Untrue, the Other True.

By FRANK FILLON.

Sheila Luton looked into the mirror and into the parlor of her cabin aboard the "Glenavon." The face that looked back at her was a singularly beautiful one, and yet, as she looked, she could not detect a line that had not come through laughing, nor one gray hair. Yet there was a certain maturity about it—the maturity that comes to all of us with thirty years of wear and tear—which evidently displeased her, for she compared it with the photograph which she held in her hand, and frowned.

The photograph showed Sheila as she had looked ten years before, when she had a fearful farewell to her lover, Thomas Shane, on the wharf at Queenstown. Thomas was going to America to make his fortune and send for her the next year. And ten years had passed and Thomas was still there.

It was not that he had been disloyal. He had written lovingly all those years, letters that sent Sheila into ecstasies of happiness. But after five years had passed and Thomas had not come, Sheila had begun to fear the day of their marriage would never arrive.

Twice, Thomas had written her saying that he was doomed to failure, that she had better give him up and marry somebody else who would be able to take care of her. He had lost position after position, he wrote; things were going from bad to worse; he saw no prospect of their union. But these letters and promises by the opposite effect to that which was intended, for Sheila's loyal heart went out more to Thomas in his trouble than to any other man.

And yet, when she had had but a little away—twenty pounds one year, twenty-five another.

Even with the happiness of the expected meeting, Sheila could not help being sorry for Philip Druce. He had loved her for five years back in the old country, and he had been so tender and loyal and good to her. When she told him about Thomas Shane and her unalterable loyalty to him, it nearly broke his heart.

And here Sheila was, in New York harbor, with the Statue of Liberty in front of her and the huge office buildings of lower Manhattan looming up like giants out of the mist.

Sheila knew that Thomas Shane was to be found at a certain number on Third Avenue. She did not know whether he lived there or merely had his office in that building, but anyway it did not matter to her, for she was going to pay him a surprise visit and all her troubles would be over. As she took her seat in the Third Avenue elevated train, clutching tightly the purse with the money—nearly fifty hundred dollars in bills, and almost rupturing the leather receptacle in which they bulged—her heart kept giving little leaps for gladness. And when at last she descended and saw the building in which Thomas was surely at work—for it was a sort of hall, with offices rented above—she was so dizzy from excitement that she could hardly stir.

But presently she summoned her courage and went in. Sheila did not like the place. To begin with, it was a political club, and rough-looking men in shirt sleeves were lounging about the entrance, and they eyed her in a manner that made her uncomfortable. And then the whole place reeked with stale tobacco smoke, and it was dirty and unswept. But the rough men answered her courteously enough when Sheila asked for Mr. Shane, and their faces brightened at the sound of her pretty Irish accent.

"Tom Shane, Miss? Sure, you'll find him in his office through that door," said one of the men.

Sheila hesitated, for men were coming and going through the swinging door, and she did not want to surprise Tom in that manner. However, there was no help for it now. She pushed open the door. There was Tom, in his shirt sleeves, seated at his desk, his hat on the back of his head and a cigar clutched sideways in his mouth. He looked fairly red, and his appearance quite stunned the girl at first, so that she waited a moment before the green screen that had been placed in front of the entrance to his office.

There were two men in the room, and they were arguing with Tom.

From what they said he seemed to be an important political leader. Sheila could see, too, that he wore a big diamond in his shirt front, and a diamond flashed as he raised one finger to emphasize his arguments. And then—Tom swore!

She would not have minded a little oath, perhaps, but what he said was something which she could not have imagined on the lips that had kissed her. She was so startled that she came out from behind the screen, and the men looked at her, and she looked at Tom; and suddenly Tom leaped to his feet and cried:

"Sheila!"

And added another oath. Sheila went up to Tom and the two men withdrew hastily, for they did not wish to intrude upon what was, they suspected, some secret in their leader's life. Sheila looked at Tom very steadily, and then she began to cry.

"Tom, Tom," she sobbed, drawing close to him. "I couldn't wait any longer. I wanted to see you. I thought I would surprise you. Are you not glad to see me, dear?"

Tom had been standing as though petrified. "What should she do," he said, "but I loved her, though he married eight years."

Sheila waited. Surely there was something in this. "But I could not be all the end, the absolute end of everything. Why, if that were so she would die. No! What should she do, again I thought, if she would give me up I'll get a divorce and send for her." But I was getting to be a big man in the district and I was not allowed in our church, as you know, and if I'd done it I'd have sent the priest against me, and then good-bye to my power. So I was hoping the old woman would die or something would turn up. But listen, Sheila—she had drawn closer to her and she smiled when she said:

"I'm rich now and there isn't a reason why you and me shouldn't count to an understanding. We can fix it some way so that I'll look respectable, and that's all that counts. Give me a kiss, kid, for I love you just the same."

How she got out of that room she did not know. She remembered afterward blushing the man from her and feeling blindly for the door. Then the screen fell as Tom tried to intercept her, and Sheila found the door handle and tore herself from his grasp upon her dress and ran. She heard men shouting after her, but she was in the street now, and running as if for dear life, and never looking back. She ran with all her power. Men turned to stare at the strange girl, racing along Third Avenue; somebody was chasing her again, too, for she heard his footsteps following swiftly behind her. She reached the corner of the block and turned into a broad side street, and passed, panting. Then, behind her, she heard a shout, and she saw a man in a top hat and a long coat, and he was calling her name. She hastened on again in terror. It must be Tom, or one of his three cronies.

"How foolish!" "Oh, I don't know." "Don't you think it foolish?" "It is mighty trying. You see, I know her husband."

"What is your idea of a satisfied wife?" "There is no such thing." "Oh, yes, there is." "What is it, I'd like to know?" "A widow."

Some Appetite. The automobile seat so soft. As horses from the range. But very soon the other things. The way it eats up change.

Not Interested. The automobile seat so soft. As horses from the range. But very soon the other things. The way it eats up change.

Remembered Material Things. "One's fastness should potatoes be planted in the dark of the moon?" "I don't forget, but that is the time to steal watermelons."

Guessed It the First Time. "John and I are thinking of taking a trip next month." "Dear me! I didn't know you had a new suit."

At Safe Distance. I'd like to be a mile away. And using still my legs. When there's a corner to be smashed in ancient storage eggs.

HIS FUNNIEST ACT

Culmination of an Old Romance Looked That Way to Some People.

By W. P. DUNN.

"Well, James, what is it?" asked rich Mrs. Tuckerman, "I told you I didn't want to be disturbed. The guests will be arriving in half an hour and I must get things ready for them."

"I beg your pardon, madam," answered the butler. "There's a young person outside with a violin who says she has an appointment with your husband."

"O, it must be that Miss—what's her name?" said rich Mrs. Tuckerman, "I'll tell her to wait in the hall and wait until I'm ready."

"Yes, madam," answered the butler. Half an hour later Mrs. Tuckerman, flushed with excitement, emerged from the reception room and found a slender young woman, with a wreath of copper-colored hair and timid demeanor, waiting a violin in her hands. At the sight of her patroness she rose.

"Well, so here you are," snapped Mrs. Tuckerman. "I don't know whether I shall want you or not, it depends on how tired my guests are after Kriese has played. You had better wait—you had better wait until the clock rings, and I'll give you three dollars extra to take charge of the ladies' wraps, because my maid hasn't come."

The girl felt the blood surge into her face; then, remembering the sick mother at home she bowed her head. "Yes, I shall be glad to, Mrs. Tuckerman," she said.

"Good!" said Mrs. Tuckerman. "James! Show this young woman to the cloak room and instruct her in the duties. And keep an eye on her if you have the chance," she added in a lower voice. "I don't know about that music person, and I don't want about that music person, and I don't want about that music person."

"Yes, madam," said James. Mrs. Tuckerman's reception was the talk of the avenue, for Mrs. Kriese, the famous pianist, had actually promised to grace it with his presence. And every one thought it an honor to have Mrs. Kriese, since he was an intimate friend of the music-loving regent of Bonn, where a lady who ranked socially high above Mrs. Tuckerman.

TELEPHONE UNDER THE SEA

New Invention That Promises to Be of the Utmost Commercial Value in the Future.

Long distance telephone calls and conversation between continents is claimed for the near future, as the result of a submarine telephone, invented by an English engineer named Williams.

The first demonstration test was made from the Pacific mainland to at least 11 miles away, a bare foot wire being stretched the distance and lying in naked contact with the salt waters. Then over the bare wire went the sound of human voices and distinct conversation was kept up for several hours.

This invention is said to overcome two supposed basic laws of electricity. The one which claims that any bare wire in contact with water would be short circuited the minute a current of electricity passed through it, and the other which claims that it is not possible to have an electric charge on a metallic conductor without that conductor's possessing an electrostatic capacity. Both the above things, however, were accomplished.

The commercial value of the invention may be judged from the fact that whereas it will cost the United States $400,000 to lay a new cable to Alaska, according to present conditions, the new invention would enable the work to be done for $20,000.

Didn't Want to Take Chances. I remember once hearing of a man who was over in the County Down. He was a great one for inventing—always turning out great ideas that were great failures. Naturally, the place like that he was the "great joke" of the countryside. Well, anyway, he invented a flying machine. It was really a pair of wings made from wire and horse's feathers.

He took a year to do it—secretly. But the night before he made his first attempt to fly, being both a hopeful and cautious man, he went round all the cottages within reach, and after sitting for a little while, chatting, but never mentioning his great invention, he said, in an off-hand way, before leaving:

"If any of you sees a strange lunkin' lying flying about the country to-morrow, he's got to be good-natured and not be shootin' at it." The bystander.

LINER ARMENIAN DID NOT STOP WHEN SIGNALLED

Refusal to Heed Submarine's Warning is Emphasized in Washington

Washington, July 2.—Tension over the destruction of the British steamer Armenian, with the loss of a number of American lives, was considerably relaxed today, following the receipt of unofficial advice that the ship's commander had refused the warning of the German submarine to stop. This phase of the matter overshadowed, in the official view, all other questions involved in the destruction of the Armenian.

Official reports should bear out news dispatches concerning attempts of the Armenian to escape, it was said no cause of complaint likely would be added to issues pending between the United States and Germany. Officially, it is held that the Armenian sought to evade capture by the sinking of the ship was justified under international law, even if non-combatants were on board.

Detailed information of the destruction of the Armenian was still available today. Until such data are available the position of the United States will not be announced.

OPINION IN LONDON.

London, July 2.—The news of the sinking of the Armenian liner, because of the bearing that the loss of American lives might have on the developments of the Lusitania disaster, has created a sensation here.

Opinion shows considerable divergence. With regard to the effect which the killing of American citizens will have upon American popular feeling and the American government, speculation is keen.

The general view here is that no fresh element has been introduced in the controversy between Berlin and Washington as to Germany's methods of submarine warfare, but that the president's position will be fortified by this further German disregard of his contention, that lives of non-combatants cannot be lawfully or rightfully put in jeopardy by the capture or destruction of an unresisting merchantman. It is, however, recognized that there are special circumstances in this case, in which Germany will lay stress.

SURVIVORS ARE LANDED.

Publication of the news of the sinking of the Armenian was not permitted in England until yesterday afternoon. A party of 50 of the survivors were landed at Avonmouth, Tuesday night. After they were landed motor buses were used to convey the party, some of them wounded, to Bristol, where the injured were admitted to the military hospital. It is reported that one of the engineers was dismembered by shell fire while the boats were being lowered from the ship. Survivors say the captain saved many lives by cutting away the boats when they were hanging from the davits, and it is asserted that the boats were not cut by shells from the submarine.

Greeks Occupy Albania Villages

Rome, July 2.—A dispatch to the Tribune from Antivari, Montenegro, says two large Greek bands are advancing toward Berat, Albania, after occupying the villages along the way.

France Shatters Teuton Pipedream

Washington, July 2.—Flat contradiction of statements that American shells have been used to a large extent by the French, was contained in a statement issued today by the French embassy. It says in part: "Statements have appeared in the press from time to time, describing the use by the French of American shells and the killing of German soldiers by such American ammunition, said to be vastly more destructive than that made in France."

"One of the German princes was asked, 'What is the percentage shot by the French in the great drive north of Arras?' His royal highness vouchsafed the opinion that 'It is rather difficult to estimate this accurately,' but he thought that at least 50 per cent were American shells, adding 'This last French offensive would not have been possible without American ammunition.'"

"In view of such frequently repeated assertions, it cannot be unwise to state once for all that France has bought no shells of any sort in the United States since the beginning of the war."

Lougheed Takes Over Department

Ottawa, July 2.—Major Gen. Sam Hughes, Canadian minister of militia, left yesterday, for New York, whence he will sail for England, Saturday. Gen. Hughes is going over to inspect the second Canadian division at Shoreham and transact business with the war office. He also will likely visit the Canadians in France.

Hon. Senator J. A. Lougheed, minister without portfolio, and leader of the government in the upper house, will be acting minister of militia during the general's absence.

GUNNER ON WARSHIP MUST SEE TARGET

Vast Difference Between Sea and Land Fighting For That Reason—Effective Range 11 Miles

Perhaps no subject is so little understood as naval gunnery, the general idea being that the effectiveness of a naval gun depends upon its range. A party of 50 of the survivors were landed at Avonmouth, Tuesday night. After they were landed motor buses were used to convey the party, some of them wounded, to Bristol, where the injured were admitted to the military hospital. It is reported that one of the engineers was dismembered by shell fire while the boats were being lowered from the ship. Survivors say the captain saved many lives by cutting away the boats when they were hanging from the davits, and it is asserted that the boats were not cut by shells from the submarine.

Suppose this was true, what use would a 25-mile range be? The problems that face the naval artillery are entirely different from those with which the military gunner has to cope. Military guns are used against objects, the gunner knows exactly where the object is, and the object, although he cannot see it, and a bill may intervene between it and the gun. His task then is a comparatively simple one.

The naval gunner fires at a moving object, so must see it before he opens fire, and that fact limits the effective range of all guns, no matter what the possible range may be. For example, to see a distance of 25 miles at sea, that is, for the horizon to be 25 miles above sea level, would require a height of 125 feet above sea level gives us an horizon of 12.5 miles. We may take it that the control station of the gunner's ship is 11 miles above sea level, and that, therefore, the extreme effective range of her guns is 11 miles and no more.

At Five Miles Distance

But let us take a ship firing at five miles—roughly, 10,000 yards—(nautical miles), which is the distance which was generally assumed before the war that naval actions would commence. The gunner would take a projectile to travel that distance; if the ship at which the shot was fired was travelling at 20 knots, that is, 23 miles an hour, the ship would have moved 120 yards in the 12 seconds which, of course, has to be allowed for when laying the gun. If the ship from which the shot is fired is also travelling at 20 knots or more, that forward movement must also be considered. The gunner fires his gun does not fire at the ship he desires to hit, but at the point at which he expects that ship to be when his shot reaches it. Unless he can actually see the ship and judge of her position, he can only throw his projectiles into the air. Last year, Mr. Churchill dealt with the matter of naval gunnery in the House of Commons, and these were the exact words used: "Its power may be measured by the fact that a 15-inch gun firing a projectile of nearly a ton in weight, and can hurl this projectile a distance of 12 miles or twelve miles, which would be from 20,000 to 24,000 yards, and it is probable that the papers have contained the thousands of yards with miles. The real advantage that the 15-inch gun has over a 12-inch, or even 13.5-inch, is that it has a flatter trajectory, which means a tremendous loss in accuracy. Some time ago, Sir Percy Scott dealt with this, and said: 'In firing at a range of 12 miles, the error of a 12-inch shot would go to an altitude of 22.6 feet, which, if my geography is correct, is 1,500 feet over the summit of Mont Blanc.'"

Fall Directly Downwards

Leaving out the question of the difference in atmosphere, it would pass through it, in the latter part of its flight, fall almost directly downwards, which very considerably reduces the range. It is better to use a ship presents a target of, say, 500 feet long by 80 feet wide, tapering towards the bow, and the target that a shot falling from a great height would have to hit. But with a flatter trajectory the target would be increased immeasurably to the danger zone increases (this is the reason a disparage to make it possible to penetrate at a distance of 10 miles or more in existence at possible naval ranges, and can fire a projectile just as far as a 12-inch, or 15-inch, further, in fact, so our object in increasing the size of the target was for nothing—purely purposes, but because we can make much more accurate shooting with the large guns, and their destructive power is, of course, immensely greater.

Cleaning a Hair Brush

An excellent way to clean a hair-brush is to take one-half cupful of salt and four in equal proportions, mix and rub through the bristles of the brush two or three times. Shake the mixture all out and the brush will be clean as new. This is better than washing the brush, for it does not soften the bristles.

Kindness to Cage Birds

To put a nest of the parasites which affect them, place a clean white cloth over the cage at night. In the morning it will be covered with very minute red spots, almost invisible without a microscope, which are the vermin so annoying and fatal to birds. Burn the cloth and repeat if necessary.

To Mix Butter and Sugar

Butter and sugar to be creamed for cake or hard sauce can quickly be reduced to the right consistency by the aid of a wooden potato masher. First warm the mixing bowl before putting in the ingredients, then mash and the result is a light creamy mass with half the usual labor.

CHERRY CULTURE IN OLD QUEBEC

Winters Too Severe For Great Success With Sweet Varieties But Sour Cherries Thrive With Care

Not as many cherries are grown in the province of Quebec as formerly. Why? This is asked Rev. Father Leopold of La Trappe in a paper read at a meeting of the Quebec Agricultural Society. Have the varieties proved less hardy for our severe climate? I do not think so. It is my opinion rather that we have simply neglected to replace the old cherry orchards as their days of existence expired. The cherry tree is a short-lived tree compared to the apple and pear tree. Yet the good crop; we can get every second year should be a safe reason to move us to plant more cherry orchards as in the days gone by. We still find cherry trees flourishing away below Quebec in our most severe winters.

Cherries are divided into two groups: The sweet and the sour cherry. Sweet cherries are very popular on the markets in Montreal; but unfortunately, we can not grow them in Quebec. They are somewhat exacting in soil and climatic conditions. In fact, the sweet cherry will not stand extreme cold weather, and when subjected to it, the tree often cracks open and is easily winter-killed. However, the sweet cherry at La Trappe we succeed in getting somewhat good stand and fair crops from at least one variety, and that is "Imperial Eugenie." There is no mistaking this variety for a sour cherry, as its tall, erect growth indicates it easily with the sweet cherry. Another reason why we cannot grow the sweet cherry in the province of Quebec is because the sweet cherry trees are early bloomers, and therefore are very subject to early spring frosts. They are thus easily damaged.

Excellent Soil Conditions

The sweet cherry prefers a light warm loam. It does not like wet feet, nor does it thrive as the pear in a stiff clay loam. On the other hand, we must avoid too gravelly or sandy soil, for such soils have a tendency to bring on the fruit too early in the spring. The sap is also brought into activity too soon, which, with our cold, is sure to have disastrous consequences upon the trees.

If we can not grow the sweet cherry, we can produce a good number of sour cherries, and these are very hardy.

I do not think that even the sour cherry is grown extensively in Quebec on a commercial basis. But in nearly every orchard we can find a few solitary trees that produce well. They are given a little care to prevent them from getting "gummosis" or the black rot.

With the establishment of canneries, the growing of a considerable area of sour cherries would be a very profitable industry. There will always be a steady demand for canned cherries. Besides this we can always depend on being able to sell our cherries for remunerative prices on our local markets for a long consumption.

From the small number of cherry trees grown in Quebec it is hard to say exactly how many are there. But we are sure of this, that the sour cherry will outlive the sweet cherry here, as it is much harder. It stands much more cold and frost in winter and in the spring. Rainy weather does not seem to damage the blossoms to such a point as will the sweet cherry.

Clean Tillage Required

The cherry tree will thrive on the lighter, well-drained loams. This fruit likes an elevated, naturally light, very loamy, sandy soil. The sour cherry tree will stand a heavier soil. The management of a cherry orchard is somewhat similar to the apple orchard. I would advise clean tillage until about the time the fruit is picked. In tilling young trees not yet bearing, I would see that ample time is left after the cultivation is over that the trees may mature and season their growth before winter. As the sour cherry tree does not make a very large tree, I would advise planting it sixteen and one-half feet each way, thus making one hundred and sixty trees per acre. I would not attempt to set out anything but a strictly first-class tree, as all others are too expensive. I prefer setting out a tree with a two-year growth from the bud, having the four-year bearing, I would see that ample time is left after the cultivation is over that the trees may mature and season their growth before winter. Meat Rations

The meat ration of the British and the German soldier is about 3 1/2 pounds a day; that of the French soldier nearly twice as much. The British soldier gets 3 1/2 pounds of meat a day, the German soldier 3 1/2 pounds of meat a day for every man of them.

Lower Birth Rate

It is common knowledge that the birth rate in France has fallen much, but it is not generally realized how rapid and great has been the fall in the birth rate in Germany during the last decades. An eminent German scientist has discovered that, though the number of marriages has practically not changed, the birth rate has fallen by more than 25 per cent, and the mortality by 35 to 40 per cent.

German Forces Massed For Attack on Warsaw; French Artillery Busy

Fresh Infantry Assaults in Arras Region Seems Probable—Colonials Keep Turks Busy While Allies Advance

London, July 2.—Evidently bent upon a decisive victory against the Russians, the Germans are not yet sending troops to the western front, but are making every effort to capture the Russian Poland capital, Warsaw. Berlin claims further advances by the great Austro-German armies in Galicia, while Field Marshal von Mackensen is pushing steadily ahead between the Vistula and Bug rivers.

Artillery activity continues unabated in the Arras region of France, but as yet there are no signs of an infantry offensive on that front, although it is scarcely possible that so many thousands of shells are being fired without such an objective. In the Argonne region, the Germans on June 30 gained some ground, though at the expense of heavy losses.

GAINS MADE AT STRAITS.

A further report regarding the Dardanelles operations claims that the colonial troops have not been checked in their efforts to advance, but that they have been used merely to keep the Turks on their front, too busy to send reserves to that portion of the line where the Anglo-French troops made an advance of 1,000 yards.

The London morning newspapers (exactly) print editorials on the sinking of the steamship Armenian by a German submarine, the text of the articles being that the relations between the United States and Germany are bound to be further strained by the latest of German submarine exploits. The editorials, however, evidently were written before the status of the Armenian liner had been settled.

BRITAIN'S COASTS ARE WELL GUARDED

Marvelous Forts Armed With Guns Fired From Control Station Perhaps Miles Away

A glimpse of the perfection of British coast defenses, which gives supreme confidence to the British authorities, that the light island of Great Britain has nothing to fear from an invasion by sea was given to a newspaperman in an interview with Mr. Neil J. Beggs, a Toronto architect. Beggs is an Irishman, born in Bray, County Wicklow, Ireland, and for a long number of years has been engaged in the management of the famous British fortifications, not only in Great Britain, but in different parts of the world. Naturally he is very guarded in what he tells. "You can understand," he said, "that a great number of things I must leave unsaid. I can only say that I have aided in the designing and constructing of some of the most famous fortifications in the world. I can give you a general description of the most modern fort, and its battery of guns. The guns range from small ones, to 4.5-inch guns, up to 12-inch ones, which will throw a shell weighing as much as three-quarters of a ton 15 miles. A very interesting feature of the modern fort, stands an officer in a conning tower, or eagle's nest, possibly 700 feet above the sea level. He is key-board almost like piano keys. Stretched in front of him is a chart of all the surrounding country, or sea within range of the fort and ready for use as a splendid telescope. The country, sea, and everything is minutely and accurately recorded for his observation, so accurate indeed, that a mistake is almost impossible.

"Now for the guns. Miles away at the fort, resting on concrete bases over forty feet thick, they are mounted. In the observation chambers down under the forts are the rooms where the shells and ammunition are kept. The guns are operated by hydraulic pressure and fired by electricity. Suppose a ship of the enemy comes within the radius of the sea on the horizon, the officer at the conning tower miles away. When the line on the telescope which he uses comes across the horizon, he notes the bearing, and he simply presses one of the keys, and the gun is fired. Then the reloading. From the subterranean chambers the shells are specially constructed which reach the level of the gun floor. A soldier in the shell chamber, who is on a shell on the lift, the hydraulic machinery carries it up to the gun floor—opposite the breech of the gun. The shell is deposited in front of the breech; the end cut off automatically; the same machinery sends it into place, and at the same time the connection is made for exploding the charge. It should also be stated that when the gun is fired, it is immediately cleaned automatically by the machinery. From the firing of the gun to the reloading, no human being has been near the underground chamber where the ammunition is loaded into the hydraulic lifts. The man in the tower with his key-board can elevate the guns, depress them, swing them about without any noise, and fire them off without human aid other than his own.

Expanding the Mines

"The mines are mined on a somewhat similar principle to the guns. An officer can set them off miles away. These observation chambers are all located in certain places, and are connected with the tower of the officer at the conning tower. Suppose a British ship was cruising along the coast, she would sail across these mines without any noise being given of her. But suppose an enemy's ship was sailing across the mine fields. When she was over one of these mines, and the officer has apparatus right before him by which he can see everything in the radius under his control; when the ship of the enemy sails over one of the mines, all he would do would be to depress a key, and good-bye ship. Yes, yes, the coast is well guarded."

THE EARNINGS OF SPIES

Large Sums Paid For Inside Information—Espionage a Profession

A spy who really takes an interest in his work and makes himself useful to the Government, that employs him—or her—may often have a very remunerative, if not exactly a pleasant, time.

A regular, accredited Government agent may expect at least $25,000 a year. Germany, which is recognized as the country that makes the most use of espionage, has also a system of bonuses, to encourage the spy and spur him on to greater efforts. It is estimated that the German Government spends an enormous sum annually in the attempt to discover the plans and intentions of other Governments. It is estimated at $400,000, and German secret service agents are found in the most unexpected places.

Russia's expenditure runs very close to that of Germany, and her system agreed to be the finest in the world. Russian spies have figured in novels and galore. In fact, the Russian system of espionage is the most perfectly organized human machine in existence. Her neighbors, France and Austria-Hungary, spend about $300,000 and $250,000 respectively for the same purpose, but it is not brought to such a pitch of perfection as in Russia. Italy spends $600,000 for her secret service, but this amount is divided by the Ministry of the Interior as follows: For secret service, $100,000; for police rewards, $170,000; and for detective service at home and abroad, $330,000.

OIL IN THE WEST

Expert of Opinion That a Great Field Awaits Discovery

Discussing the oil field of Western Canada at the Institution of Petroleum Technologists, Great Britain, Mr. Cunningham Craig said recently: "All drilling for oil is to some extent speculative, and no one who has studied these western prospective fields with any care has failed to point out over and over again that though the rewards of success would be great, the possibility of complete failure in any one district is considerable. Yet it seems almost impossible that there cannot be a paying oilfield waiting for development somewhere, between the far north and the international boundary. There will doubtless be many disappointments for lack of the development work now in progress was foredoomed to failure, but I believe, and I think that every one who has travelled sufficiently in Western Canada will concur, that there is petroleum in these great territories and that it will be discovered and produced profitably at no very distant date."

THE ORCHARD PAYS

Good Money to be Made by Growing of Apples

Fruit growing if properly looked after is one of the most profitable industries in Canada. It requires considerable attention both in the growing and marketing. If an orchard comes along many are apt to lose interest and neglect giving the fruit trees the best attention.

A well cared for apple orchard, one year with another, will return a big profit than any other kind of farm. It is, indeed, a poor year when the net returns from the orchard does not average $100 per acre. When the prices are good from $200 to $300 is often realized. To obtain these prices special care in pruning and spraying and fertilizing and cultivation are necessary.

Great improvement in recent years has been made in better care of neglected orchards. The Governments have assisted in every way possible and are always willing to help those who are willing to help themselves.

The demand for box packed apples of best quality is increasing very rapidly, these should be wrapped in paper as they pack and remain in place better in the box. It also insures better keeping, being less subject to bruising in handling. In nearly all the best fruit growing districts co-operative fruit growers' associations have been formed, these associations if properly managed are of great assistance to the fruit growers. By uniting, spraying supplies can be purchased much cheaper and the crop handled in a much cheaper way.—Poultry, Garden and Home Advocate.

Soldier's Queer Discuits

The Indian and Australian can make their own army biscuits; the former is a "chuppatty," the latter "dumplings." A chuppatty is made by mixing into a stiff paste by an Indian of flour, salt and water, and baking it on a metal dish over a hot fire. But the Indian cook seems a necessary ingredient to make it tasty as well as nutritious. Dampers need flour, baking powder, water and wood. A hole in the ground is the oven. Fill it with your wood, and while that is burning make your dough. Then lay it on a large stone, cover it with a tin, and cover the tin with the hot wood ashes, and the result will be damper.

German Brutal to Prisoners
Mrs. C. E. Morgan of Guelph, England, communicated to the English press a letter in which she said: "I have to-day received a letter from a company sergeant-major in the Queen's Regiment interned in a German camp. Writing on a postcard to thank me for a parcel, he added: 'Three men have died quite recently; he gives the names, all men of the Queen's Regiment. A private, writing to his wife said: 'For the love of Heaven, send me bread. If you know what's going on out here you would not wait to be asked twice.' How many more of our prisoners of war are to be allowed to die without any effort being made to save them?'"

WOMAN AS A CITIZEN

Mrs. Nellie McClung on the Responsibilities of the Ballot

Here are a few excerpts from an address delivered in the West, by Mrs. Nellie McClung, the charming speaker and writer known to women everywhere throughout Canada. "It is argued, sometimes, that a man's grandmother did not want the vote," she said. "If she was alive to-day she would want it. With the introduction of much modern labor saving machinery into the home the woman is now the stayed class. She had been accused of passing her time in idle things. All serious things have been closed to her. The tendency of civilization has been to make her light and frivolous. I hope that the opening up of activities for women, throwing upon them greater responsibilities, will result in making woman a measure to her responsibilities."

She voiced the injustice of the inequality of the criminal code, which made the punishment for stealing a 'boy' 15 years, while that sufficient to make people think?

She asked if it was always going to happen that drink and war could take their children, while they didn't have a voice in it all. But it was not going to continue when women appeared. This she had put too small an estimate upon themselves.

"We blame the military spirit of Germany," and properly, she said, "but we also think bitterly of the apathy of the German women who sat by and watched these things happen. They have been wonderfully patient and good and self-sacrificing. If the theory was good that the women who were most obedient raised the best sons, then Germany would be one of the finest races of men on earth. It doesn't work out. Instead of respecting these good women, their mothers, they made a mockery of the women and children of Belgium."

"But the Belgians have shown us there is something better than to live—that there is something more than life. We owe a great debt to that nation which we must be prepared to pay if ever they take this country. One thing is certain, there will be a great influx from Middle Europe to this land of the new day. What are we going to do for them? Are we going to fling open the bar to them? Are we going to offer them our old political ideas, or reform and broader citizenship? Politics here at home means pull—what can I get—what kind of job is there for me? If this is all, I should be ashamed of myself, for we should be of help to the world."

We must get a larger ideal of citizenship, broad as the very world. I don't like the patriotism of 'My country 'tis of thee,' and in that I mean no disrespect to our friends across the border. It applies just as much to us. We want to get past the day when in order to express our love of our own country we must cast asunder 'a lot of other countries. We must get past the day of unnatural trade relations which tend to breed suspicion between peoples."

Beliefs About Babies

Almost all countries have their superstitions about babies. In Holland, bread, steak, garlic, and salt are put into the cradle of a new baby to "ensure it always getting enough to eat. In Greece the mother, before putting her child in the cradle, turns it three times round before the fire, singing to it "the while" to ward off evil spirits. In Sweden a book is put under the head of the baby to make it quick at learning to read, and money is put into its first bath that it may be rich. In Wales a knife or a pair of tongs is put into the baby's bed to keep danger away. In England a baby is taken upstairs, before going down "for luck." In Spain the little one's face is lightly brushed into the branch of a fir tree, also "for luck."

Range Finder at Sea

An Instrument Which Gives Observer Eyes Twenty-one Feet Apart

A range finder on a battleship is an ingenious optical contrivance which gives the observer who looks into it exactly the view he would have if his eyes were twenty-one feet apart. An enemy's ship therefore appears as if seen from two points of view separated by that distance.

This line, twenty-one feet long, represents the base of an imaginary triangle, the apex of which touches the hostile vessel. The instrument shows the two angles at the base of the triangle, which, together with the known length of the base, give the distance of the enemy's craft or in other words the range.

There are three or four other range finders in various places, on top of the turret or elsewhere, each instrument being erected on a tripod. The observations of all of them are communicated by telephone to the plotting room, which is under the water line of the ship. There the whole problem is worked out on a mathematical basis, but with utmost clarity, and thence the proper ranges for the guns are sent to the turrets.

Officers of exceptional cleverness are employed in this kind of work, on which so much depends. The spotting room is provided with all sorts of instruments, including a master dial, with a switch which, when turned to one figure or another, causes corresponding figures to appear on dials in all of the turrets.

Woman's World

Helen Frick, Helene, Very Rich, Though Simple in Her Tastes.

HELEN FRICK, DAUGHTER OF PITTSBURGH MILLIONAIRE

Less is known about Helen Frick, the Pittsburgh heiress, than about almost any other rich girl, says the New York Magazine.

Her portrait has been painted by a great artist, but the picture is fearfully guarded by the family. It portrays a typical American girl, with broad forehead, wide apart, kind eyes, a wealth of reddish brown hair which waves naturally and a softly curved mouth. Only the nose and chin suggest the firmness of her character. She does not resemble her mother in the least, her only brother, Henry Frick, Jr., taking after that parent in looks.

Helene is a great chum of her mother as well as of her big brother, Mrs. Frick is in no sense of the word a society woman. The home life of the family has been ideal, never having been touched by a breath of those odious scandals which seem to cling to the homes of some of the rich.

There has never been any garish show of wealth in the Frick home nor any parade of philanthropy. Helen Frick is just as femininely human as any other young woman of her age. She is fond of pretty clothes and likes to plan and shop for them herself. Most of her gowns are made right in New York, for, like the rest of the family, she cares little for Europe or its products, although she has, of course, traveled extensively abroad.

But shopping is not the unalloyed pleasure to her that it is to other girls because of the fact that when she starts on such errands she is obliged to take two detectives in plain clothes along with her. She has objected strenuously to this time and again, regarding it as an infringement on her personal liberty. But on this one point she has never been able to out-general her father.

Therefore when Helen Frick goes to buy lace for a gown or a pair of dainty slippers she is obliged to do so with a pair of detectives looking on. And, as she has so often said, "that spoils half the fun."

The Policeman

The policeman is now to be reckoned with. Kansas City has a woman in police uniform in one of its theaters, and the experiment has proved successful. Miss Lillian Dorn was formerly a schoolteacher in Iowa. Her success in managing unruly boys led eventually to her appointment as special policeman of the Century Theater. During a fire in an adjoining building she cleared the house in a manner so efficient and thoroughly afterward stopping traffic in the street, to give the fire apparatus room, that the city authorities bestowed upon her a police officer's commission.

Furniture Covering

If you do not wish to go to the expense of having covers for your furniture made by the upholsterer try the expedient of pinning on summer covers.

Cut pieces the exact size of chair or section of sofa, allow the material to turn in a hem all around edge if it be not bound with wash braid. Fasten the pieces in place with big-headed white pins placed as close as upholstery tacks. The pins are ornamental and form a trimming. If less contrast is desired get pins of gilt or color of braid.

Thunderstorms and Milk

The popular belief that thunderstorms sour milk seems to be pretty thoroughly exploded. Experiment has shown that milk deprived of lactic organisms is not affected by climatic conditions, and if milk is kept cold it does not sour in thundery weather. The apparent connection between thunderstorms and sour milk is probably due to the sultry conditions preceding the storm.

Successful Woman

Mrs. Catherine M. Cook, state superintendent of public instruction for Colorado, and Mrs. Sarah Platt Decker took the leading parts in the laying of the cornerstone of the first building erected in Colorado to be devoted exclusively to the development of house hold art and women's work. The building is the gift of Senator Guggenheim to the Colorado Agricultural college.

Visits British Lines

Dunkirk, June 29.—Queen Elizabeth of Belgium visited the British lines on Sunday. As she viewed the ruins of Ypres from a hill, she wept over the destruction wrought by artillery and fire in the famous Flanders town. As she turned from the scene she often exclaimed: "It can never be replaced."

THE W. E. LORD COMPANY, LTD.

Letter From W. H. Hadley

Mr. H. Bradfield, of Bradfield & Magee, has received the following letter from Mr. W. H. Hadley, leading Seaman of H.M.S. Shearwater, Esquimaux, B.C.

Red Deer, Alta.,
Well Heck, how are you getting on, are you having a fair share of the trade of the city generally, if you are not, well, you are not getting what is coming to you. My thoughts often go back to the old familiar faces in Red Deer, for I made many friends there, and you were one of the first, and I sometimes think it would be pretty hard if we were never to meet again, and while so far I have had no opportunity given me of getting to the front, one never knows one day from another what will turn up, and in the meantime I have to be content, teaching the younger hands the intricacies of sea life. In regard to Victoria B.C. it is a beautiful place and would be hard to beat but from a business point of view it is dead. The subdivisions show what the place must have been like a couple of years ago, but there's nothing to it now.

I get the great "moral weekly", "The News", and so keep in touch with what is going on. The soldiers must be missed very much. Kindly remember me to any enquirers, and say that I am alright, and so with kind regards to Mrs. Bradfield and yourself,
I remain,
Yours sincerely,
BILLY.

German Submarines Send Two Norwegian Ships To Bottom

Crews of Both Vessels Rescued—U39 Having Busy Time

London, June 30.—The Norwegian ship Cambskenneth, which sailed from Portland, Ore., February 9, for Liverpool or Manchester, was sunk today by the German submarine U39. Thirteen members of the crew were landed. Eight other sailors, being German subjects, were taken aboard the submarine.

The Norwegian steamship Gjeso, of 1,004 tons gross, also was sunk by a German submarine today. The crew was landed at North Shields. The vessel was sent to the bottom by a torpedo.

Rome, June 29.—An important diplomatic document with reference to the war is being prepared by Pope Benedict XV., it was learned today. It is expected to be announced shortly. The pope is showing keenly the strain of the war, and the worry imposed by "interviews" attributed to him by various European newspapers.

The G. T. R. Co.'s New Hotel

In line with their usual policy of progressiveness and to provide the best possible service, not only in the way of transportation facilities for passengers, but also for their care and comfort while travelling in Western Canada, the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway have added one more feature in the way of a hotel at Edmonton, "The Macdonald," which was opened on July 1st, and which is not surpassed by the American continent for location, architectural design, furnishings, equipment, cuisine, and all other matters that go to make for the comfort and convenience of the travelling public. "The Macdonald" is situated in the heart of the business portion of Edmonton, Alberta, and is particularly convenient to the Grand Trunk Pacific station there. It is of chateau architecture; contains two hundred rooms, one hundred and fifty baths. The hotel has been designed so as to have all outside bedrooms, which permits of a magnificent view of the entire country overlooking the Saskatchewan River. European plan will prevail; rates to meet present conditions have been named, viz.: Rooms—$2.00 per day and upwards, without bath; $3.00 per day and upwards, with bath; thus permitting the travelling public to secure a maximum of comfort at a minimum of expense. Mr. Louis Love has been appointed resident manager. This gentleman has had many years experience in the better class of hotels throughout the country, and is fully qualified to successfully look after the patrons of this magnificent hotel.

The Princess Patricia Regiment

For the love of a lady they came
From foundry and mine,
From the plains of the ultimate West,
From the foot-hills of pine.
For the love a lady most noble and fair
They mustered in line.

In her regal, majestic home
By the Ottawa's tide,
In the heat of the long afternoons
Her needle she plied,
And the silken device of a Regiment grew.

She embroidered her pride.
But the Colonel was buried in France.
He was torn by a shell.
And the Major was wounded full sore.

But he murmured "Tis well!"
And the Sergeants looked once at the fluttering silk
And went plunging through Hell.

For the foe was a ravening wolf.
Their virgins were found
In madness, in naked despair,
Fagged out on the ground.
And the soul of each "Princess Patricia" man
Was the soul of a hound.

For the love of a lady they fought,
For a lady they died.
Though hundreds of heroes be slain,
Their names will abide.
And the tears of the lady are tribute
Of love
And of holiest pride.

Italians Sending Heavy Artillery Against Austrians

Rome, June 29.—Heavy masses of artillery are being sent from Brescia to the Po river for the reduction of Austrian forts defending Riva, at the northern extremity of Lake Garda.

With Riva in Italian hands the way will be opened for an advance against Trent from the west, and thus three Italian armies will be driving against Trent simultaneously—one from the west, one from the south and the other from the north-east.

The invasion of Austria by way of the Notia VII passes, west of Lake Garda, is the latest of the brilliant successes that have stunned the Italian armies since the war began.

Health Restored by "Fruit-a-lives"

MELLE, C. GAUDREAU
Rochester, N. Y., Jan. 14th, 1915.
"I suffered for many years with terrible indigestion and constipation. I became thin and miserable. I had frequent dizzy spells and became so run down that I never thought I would get well again.
A neighbor advised me to try 'Fruit-a-lives'. I did so and to the surprise of my doctor, I began to improve and headed me to get on with 'Fruit-a-lives'. I continued this medicine and all my indigestion and constipation were relieved. I consider that I owe my life to 'Fruit-a-lives' and I want to say to those who suffer from indigestion, constipation or headaches, try 'Fruit-a-lives'. Give this lovely fruit medicine a fair chance and you will get well the same as I did!"

Allied Success Near At Straits; Foe Exhausted

Thousands Found Dead In Trenches and Fall of Kritbia Imminent.

Paris, June 30.—A Havas Agency dispatch from Athens says the exhaustion of the Turks facing the French forces on the Gallipoli peninsula is evident and leads to the belief that the Turkish position at Kritbia will soon be taken by assault. In a recent advance made by the French, it is added, 6,000 Turks were found dead in the trenches on the front taken.

REBELLION IS FEARED.

London, June 30.—The Daily Chronicle's correspondent in Constantinople says the condition of affairs in Constantinople is rapidly becoming intolerable. He says: "A measure, recently taken, of stripping for and confiscating all arms, even knives, both in shops and private possession, was decided on, only partly in order to meet the needs of the army. The main reason was fear of an armed rising of the populace. Within the last four weeks two plots to organize such a rising have been discovered by the police. Over 100 persons were arrested, and after trials sentenced to death or internment in some corner of Asia Minor."

2,500 IN ONE HOSPITAL.

The number of wounded in the city districts computation. In one hospital alone—and that by no means the largest—there were 2,500 cases last week. The more dangerous cases are not brought to the capital at all, but have to content themselves with rough and ready treatment at Gallipoli, Dardanelles or Rodosto. Not only is small arms ammunition becoming scarce, but the medical supplies are also running low. The second line troops in Thrace are partly armed with a variety of weapons that is truly amazing. In the three previous contests, there were eleven hundred candidates and only four were successful.

CALLS ATTENTION TO GALLANTRY OF ANOTHER PATRICIA

Sergeant Cookson Got Vital Dispatch Through To Bring Reinforcements

London, June 30.—A member of the Princess Patricia's, signing himself "One of Those Who Write," writes in The Times today to call attention to Sergeant Cookson's gallantry during the fighting in May. "This man," he writes, "deserves the greatest honor for his unflinching and conspicuous gallantry during the whole of those terrible days, as it was indeed chiefly owing to his coolness and indomitable pluck that Lieutenant Niven, after Major Gaetz was knocked out, was able to save the entire position. It was Sergeant Cookson who got the vital dispatch through for reinforcements and brought them up when volunteers were called for this perilous task, and I guess no one living will ever deny the justice of honoring this brave man who fought as a Gordon Highlander in the last contest of those days you have given prominence to."

IN FOR ANOTHER WINTER CAMPAIGN

German Resistance Lessening, But They Have Trenches to Berlin.

London, June 29.—Writing exactly a week ago, a Canadian military officer says: "Although the sting has been taken out of the German resistance, I am afraid we are in for another winter campaign. The enemy has probably dug trenches all through North France and Belgium right away from the coast to the interior. The place back to another. The only thing is that as soon as our artillery gets to work on German towns and the eyes of the people will be opened and they will shrink for peace. I don't think there is much chance of anything but a long campaign. They are doing so well they can't be spared."

MISS MARIE GAUTHIER
the clever little graduate of the Garbutt Business College, who won the Canadian championship in error-proof typewriting.

Miss Marie Gauthier Wins the Remington Accuracy Award

An interesting typewriting contest was held on June 17 in all the offices in Canada and the United States of the Remington Typewriter Company. The contest consisted of writing absolutely without error for fifteen minutes at a minimum speed of sixty words per minute, and the prize for the most successful candidate was a brand new Remington typewriter, value one hundred and thirty dollars. The International Typewriting rules were used in the correction of the papers. These contests are held semi-annually in the months of January and June, and are open to all typists, experienced and inexperienced. In the three previous contests there were eleven hundred candidates and only four were successful. In the contest held at Calgary on the 17th there were eleven contestants, and a wire has just been received from the head office at New York that Miss Marie Gauthier, one of the contestants, was successful. Miss Gauthier's success is all the more remarkable when you consider that it is less than seventeen months since she began the study of typewriting in the Garbutt Business College, at Weyburn, Sask. She completed her course at the Garbutt College in Calgary, and at present is employed in the office of J. H. Graham, barrister. Miss Gauthier wrote 1033 words in the fifteen minutes, making a rate of sixty-six words a minute. She has written at the rate of more than one hundred words a minute, but not without error. In no previous test has a Canadian typist won this honor. She can, therefore, legitimately claim to be the Canadian champion in error-proof typewriting.

GERMAN SOLDIER A VISITOR HERE

Tells of Experiences in German Army

IS NATURALIZED CITIZEN OF U. S. AND WAS FORCED TO BEAR ARMS IN EUROPEAN STRUGGLE

We take the following interesting article from the Fort Madison, Iowa, Weekly Democrat: "Thursday a. m. Fort Madison was visited by Dr. Herman Miller, who is en route to his home in Tacoma, Wash. Dr. Miller has just returned from Europe, where he has been serving in the German army, both as a soldier and in a professional capacity. Dr. Miller, who is but twenty-eight years old, was visiting his parents, four younger brothers and baby sister, Rosa, when the war broke out. His own story of what happened follows: "I left Tacoma May 23 of last year and sailed for Hamburg on the Lloyd line, arriving in Hamburg on the eighth day, was visiting his parents, four younger brothers and baby sister, Rosa, when the war broke out. "I found my relatives and neighborhood apprehensive that there might be trouble, but this was considered a remote possibility and few gave serious consideration to the prospect of war. I had been home about a month when the proclamation was passed that all men of military age should hold themselves in readiness for service in the army. "As I had American citizenship papers, I did not think I would be called upon, but these were ignored, and I was among the first to be taken and put in the service. When I reached Berlin the authorities found I had had some experience in hospital work, so I was then sent to work in one of the hospitals in Paris. "After I got into Paris I posed as a tourist and made my way back to the German lines, where I thought I could make a report and the matter would be dropped. But in this I was disappointed for the authorities asserted that I was German born and my parents lived in Germany and I had to serve in the army. "I was sent to Lozanne and a few days after the command to which I had been assigned was sent to the front and I was shot in the left shoulder. I was then sent back to my home until the wound had healed and it was just before Christmas that we received word that my brother Jacob had been killed. Six days after we received the word of my brother's death, another brother, Harry, was brought home injured and lived but a few days. "By this time my shoulder was healed and I was sent to a command in Russia and was wounded a second time with a bayonet which was thrust into my left arm. With a wounded shoulder and a wounded arm I was not a good prospect for military service, and so shipping through the lines and stowed myself away on a steamer bound for New Orleans and reached that port on May 22, just one year after I had left for the old country. "SIGHTS ARE TERRIBLE. "Speaking of sights, there is one I saw in Lozanne that, while scientifically interesting, was at the same time horrible. A German soldier was marching when he was hit by a shell which severed his head from his body. His body walked for several paces, while his head remained on the ground. Some of the deaths I have witnessed were horrible. Men died screaming and moaning, while others became raving maniacs because of pain and fright. "SPIES ALL OVER EUROPE. "Spies are all over Europe at the present time, as well as all over America. Germany has many spies in every country, and some of them are paid enormous salaries for the reliable information which they exchange. Germany knows just what is going on everywhere. Speaking of rulers, none of them are fit for the front except the King of Belgium. The royalties of Europe are not exposing themselves to the war. It is the rank and file that have to suffer and yet Germany has many men at home ready to send to the front. "No man in any of the armies know what it's all about. Nobody outside of the heads of affairs know why there is fighting, and so the soldier in the trenches goes on. It's killed or be killed, and most of them choose to kill. There is no other way."

WOMEN SUFFER.

"Severely is one of the afflictions of the men in the trenches. There are many others, and more men die than from exposure and its results last year than by bullets. "The women of Germany suffer terribly because of the war. They are at home and all the men at the front and upon the women depends the work of supporting the children. "I was speaking of conditions in Germany to an American the other evening, and he said, 'see here, Dr. Miller, Germany is your mother country and it is not right that you should speak ill of her.' "I replied: 'Germany is my mother country, but the United States is my wife's. God gives a man his mother, but he chooses his wife, and it is not written that a man shall forsake father, mother and cleave to his wife.' "I gladly forsake my mother country or the Fatherland, as it is usually called, in order to keep faith with the country of my choice—I do not care to return to Germany until monarchies have become republics. "Dr. Miller stated that he thought the war would be the direct cause of making republics of many of the European countries as the people are tired of being oppressed and wish for the bigger and broader form of government. "Dr. Miller left Thursday for the west and he will return to Tacoma, Wash., where he will again take up his practice."

Letters from The Front

Evergreen, June 28th, 1915.

Dear Sir:—I give extract from letter from Oscar Maitland Alexander, my son, who is in France, 5th Battalion, 2nd Brigade, 1st Canadian Contingent.

"We are having a pretty good time just now, but have lost an awful lot of men the last few days. I shall have some pretty good tales to tell you when I get back. I was all through the big battle in which the Canadians did such good work, especially the 2nd Brigade. I am still cooking, in fact the only time we go into the trenches is when we get our cook wagon sent out. I lose it in some way or another, and then we only go in until we get another up from the base. Say, you should see the Germans run when we charge them. They just let out one yell, and then beat it. Well, I am getting on fine. The shells don't seem to bother us any more; we have got used to them."

O. M. ALEXANDER.

P.S.—It is just one hundred years since one of his ancestors, Sir Peter de Montfort, took Napoleon prisoner on board the Bellerophon after the battle of Waterloo.

Yours truly,
J. ALEXANDER.

First Canadian Cavalry Brigade, France.

June 11th, 1915.

Dear Mr. Carwell:—

Thought I would drop you a few lines, and let you know how things are generally. I expect you know the 25th was broken up pretty well at Valenciennes. Several of the boys could not resist the temptation of joining the regulars so as to be with the horses again. I joined the Lord Strathcona's Horse (Royal Canadian). We had a pretty tough time in Salisbury Plain, but the boys all stuck it well.

We all went into billets the first week in March. From there we went to Mansfield Park, which belonged to the German Prince Munster. It's a lovely spot. Here we were brigaded into the First Canadian Cavalry Brigade, and an on Royal Canadian Dragoons, Lord Strathcona's Horse (Royal Canadian), 2nd King Edward's Horse, and the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery. About the end of April we were asked to go out to the trenches to help relieve the strain on the Infantry. The men all volunteered to go, leaving the horses behind. About this time measles broke out in the ranks, and about 1000 men were left behind in quarantine. I happened to be one of the unfortunate Sergeants, left with these men. About two weeks later we got out of quarantine, and went down to Canterbury. From here we left for France.

I am very well. Get plenty to eat—bully beef, dog biscuits, sugar, cheese and jam. At present we are at a rest camp at —. We expect to go up to the trenches —. We are not allowed to say very much regarding the names of places for fear of news falling into wrong hands.

Hope yourself and Mrs. Carwell are in the best of health. Kind regards to all the boys.

Yours sincerely,
H. B. GEORGE, Sergt. L.S.M. (R.C.)

Since receiving the above letter Mrs. George has received word that they are in the trenches.—Ed.

Ridgewood

The people of this district intend holding their annual celebration, known as the Old Timers' Picnic, on the school grounds on Thursday, July 15th, and extend a cordial invitation for everybody to be in attendance. The committee in charge are arranging for a number of programmes of the leading athletic events. A tug-of-war and a baseball match, at which Burnt Lake is scheduled to play Markerville, hockey, racing and probably a few sensational features of a wild west performance will form an exceptionally interesting portion of the day's proceedings. Don't get switched, but make straight for Ridgewood on July 15th, and spend the best holiday you have had for some time, as nothing but unfair weather can hamper the large crowd which has always thronged our grounds at previous demonstrations from having a day of unparalleled enjoyment. The Ladies' Aid intend having a refreshment booth on the grounds and will display the usual courtesy and prompt service in entering to your desire with the best of ice cream and soft drinks, etc. We must not forget to mention that the whole celebration will conclude with a great dance, to which no further reference is necessary, as the fame and popularity of the dancing functions being given greater on every occasion.
